

Crain's New York Business Names Linedata a Best Place to Work in New York City, Two Year's in a Row

PARIS and NEW YORK December 7, 2011: Linedata, the global solutions provider dedicated to the investment management and credit industry, has been named one of the 'Best Places to Work in New York City,' for the second year running by Crain's New York Business.

"New York is a highly competitive market and our ability to retain and attract top talent here is paramount for Linedata," said Annie Morris, managing director of Linedata North America. "Today it is not just about attracting top talent but about retaining those key employees. We have built a culture in which employees can accomplish the best work of their careers and be rewarded for exceptional results. We are delighted our New York team has validated our firm as one of New York's best, earning us a place on the Crain's New York Business list of top employer."

Crain's 'Best Places to Work in New York City' winners were chosen based on the results of a weighted survey of both employees and employers conducted by Crain's New York Business in partnership with Best Companies Group. It is the fourth consecutive year Crain's has conducted this research to determine the most desirable companies to work for in New York City.

"The 50 companies that make up Crain's 'Best Places to Work in New York City' represent the top employers throughout the five boroughs and explain why the best and brightest from all over the country consistently choose to make our city the place where they live and work," said Xana Antunes, editor of Crain's New York Business. "This distinguished group of winners can take pride in the fact that it was the praise and support of their own employees that earned them this honor in the nation's most competitive business market."
